All I have to go on is the ResMed Battery Guide and some anecdotal comments. Also the Capn was saying the S9 blower is more efficient and uses less power if you use batteries. Since I don't have the unit I can't begin to think what is using the extra power, but it seems like there's a 3.2 amp-hour per night overhead to the new units. If so, the round control knob on top may have broken off.Á Á This is not uncommon to see when we examine ResMed S9 CPAPs that come in for repair / service.Á Á There is a metal shaft which is part of the main control board that is designed to hold the knob in place.Á Á If this shaft has sheered off, the entire board will need to be replaced unfortunately as any setting changes on the unit will not be possible if not repaired properly.Last but not least, there are S9 humidifier and tubing problems.Á Á Lets start out with heated tubing or standard hoses.Á Á People can experience a "blocked tubing" error on their ResMed S9 CPAP machine during usage. This is further exasperated when the tank becomes dry during usage (never under-fill).Á Á So again, if you notice water has made its way outside of the tank, replace it ASAP.Á ÁÁ ÁWe have people inquire all the time regarding not getting enough moisture from their S9's humidifier and not heating up adequately.Á Á They will wake up being dry and notice the water chamber is either cold or not using any water like it did before when new.Á Á The S9 humidifier is an adaptive system.Á Á Át has sensors that will adjust according to the ambient room, your body and machine settings.Á Á There are many variables to consider and the amount of moisture you get nightly can and will vary night to night and season to The amount of water used is not an indicator that the humidifier is not working properly. In the future we will create a detailed post for this topic. Ultimately, a quick test to see if the humidifier can heat up is to simply use the preheating function of your appliance (read manual) and feel the bottom of the water chamber to see if it becomes hot.If not, replace the humidifier. repairs for the ResMed S9 because it is not cost effective to do so.Feel free to send a question or comment about repairing ResMed S9 CPAP or problems with your CPAP malfunction. Its predecessor was the well-known S8 line. The S8 was a very compact unit due to its robust individual operating engine components, and a built-in power supply opposite the S9 which now has an external transformer. Sorry, I can't confirm that the power consumption is potentially higher on the AirSense 10...I have no experience in the use of batteries. If you want a copy, give me your e-mail address and I will send it to you. You really shouldn't need a manual, but it might be nice to find a way to test the pressure when you're done. Probably not a maker offers or switch so that you don't have that special apap mode available, a little more in the energy consumption for the S10 out of curiosity. If you ever see an error in your s9, refer to "check the 90 watt power supply", look for the broken pins on the plug. We can take care of those embedded pins for you. The power switch was updated using a real mechanical switch under the power button. The S8 was and still is notorious for the start/stop buttons that are being carried out due to the touch style controls (we can repair them). Another problem that the S9 helped solve was water intrusion from the humidifier. I'm thinking of renovating the old one. Maybe I misunderstood these things when I read it. I'm the kind of person who fixes everything and uses it for many years. Wulfman... Full disclosure: I have never used or measured any Rena bomb.
